Cole already hates himself, so that's a realistic concern. When the film mercifully finished, I crawled into bed and stared wide-eyed at my door for most of the night while my friend snuffled peacefully, completely oblivious to my terror. You could describe the sounds as ghostly, eerie and insinuating a film about supernatural forces.

The film kind of represents the lightbulb from the beginning. The use of the ceiling lightbulb is a metaphor for Cole's inner world. He faces terrors few adults could stare down and, rather than pushing them away, he accepts them, claims a tranquility in spite of. Viewers are first welcomed into the film with the opening credits. We were supposed to draw a picture. The nakedness of Vincent could show that Vincent has hadenough; he displayed a vulnerability that is very strong at this current moment as the audience begin to wonder what Vincent is capable of and will Malcolm be able to resolve the issue? As we learn more about him, we come to understand that Cole craves connection.
