Each time I pray it gets easier. Although not a major character in the film, Divine had been eager to play the part because he wished to perform in more male roles and leave behind the stereotype of simply being a female impersonator. They contacted Thomas Noguchi the Chief Coroner for the County of Los Angeles Independent of Waters, he also appeared in a number of other films, such as Lust in the Dust and Trouble in Mind seeking to diversify his repertoire by playing male roles. During his childhood and adolescence, Divine was called "Glenn" by his friends and family; as an adult, he used the stage name "Divine" as his personal name, telling one interviewer that both "Divine" and "Glenn Milstead" were "both just names. Set in the Wild West during the nineteenth century, the movie was a sex comedy to the end of the film, Lady Divine is raped by a giant lobster named Lobstora, an act that drives her into madness; she subsequently goes on a killing spree in Fell's Point before being shot down by the National Guard.
