Nothing is good or bad in itself, everything depends on the consequences that an action allows one to foresee. Terrorism is on the rise.

We need men who have their gaze directed to God, to understand true humanity. But it received precisely in Europe its most effective cultural and intellectual imprint and remains, therefore, identified in a special way with Europe. He argues that both Christian culture and the Enlightenment formed the West, and that both hold the keys to human life and freedom as well as to domination and destruction. Less visible, but no less disquieting, are the possibilities of self-manipulation that man has acquired.

Godless society and in the wake of this form of rationality, Europe has developed is on the rise. It has always defined men, all men without distinction, as creatures and images of God, proclaiming for them, in terms of principle, although within the imperative limits of social ordering, the same dignity.
