The mystery, about two teenagers and their babysitter, has many twists and turns and is brought to a satisfactory, if somewhat unlikely, conclusion. I hate for each book to end! Extremely detailed police procedural set in the capital of Rendell-Land, Ki But as hours stretch into days, he begins to suspect he has a kidnapping on his hands. I don't like to 'rewrite' the book I'm reading, going on with why didn't she do this? Like Winslow and Houston? What did you like least? However, that being said, it was a bit too wordy and the subplots about the inspector's daughters were uninteresting and made the book drag on. Or, even more annoying, let the most mundane statement trail into deep, personal, and fading introspection.
