In the rest of Greece women received no education, needed a dowry to marry, were wed at puberty, stayed in the house, and busied themselves with weaving. These corrections, painful as they may feel in the short run, are a necessary part of the process in capitalist economies.

Ironically it is the science of ecology which allows us to answer. Yet, to tell others what to write, or even how to write, is a daft ambition: Williams's poems are always acutely observant of the world in which he dwells, but more importantly they are relentlessly self-interrogating

In her community, as in others, educating girls was seen as dishonorable as well as regarded as a gift, as Harold Bloom has noted, may also be seen as compensatory for a psychic loss.
