Since every poet in America probably has a couple of 'car poems' I marvel at your courage in issuing an announcement. In my favor was my ability to read a micrometer, as the work often required accuracy to the thousandth of an inch when trimming the face of a gear. The idea underlying these assumptions was that technology was inherently neutral, and that it automatically connected itself to clear-cut ends such as better transportation.

The promoters really meant to manufacture electric automobiles; then it is a
